

Eighty years on: honouring memory, upholding humanity

May 23, 2025, Accountability / Analysis / Generating Respect for IHL / History / Humanitarian Action / IHL

🕒 2 mins read

This year marks eight decades since the Holocaust, a defining moment of human suffering and moral failure. The memory of six million murdered Jews, and millions of others persecuted and killed, remains a solemn imperative. It compels not only remembrance, but a reaffirmation of collective responsibility. The 1949 Geneva Conventions were born to serve as a legal and moral bulwark against such atrocities. Yet memory fades, and with it, vigilance. As civilians continue to suffer in today's wars, the legacy of the Holocaust urges both commemoration and action: against dehumanization, against silence, and in defence of the rules meant to protect life and human dignity in conflict.

This audio recording captures a discussion recently held at ICRC headquarters in Geneva, Switzerland, as part of an institutional event to mark the 80th anniversary of the Holocaust – a moment of remembrance and reflection. Thirty years ago, the ICRC publicly acknowledged its failure during the Holocaust: silence in the face of mass extermination. While not an exhaustive account of the ICRC's actions and inactions, the conversation confronts a number of difficult truths to inform present and future action. It is not intended to offer comfort, but clarity. By revisiting parts of this painful history, the ICRC reaffirms its commitment to transparency, accountability, honoring victims, and the enduring relevance of international humanitarian law.

ICRC Humanitarian Law & Policy Blog · Eighty years on: honouring memory, upholding humanity

Tags: armed conflict, Civilians, compliance, Geneva Conventions, Holocaust, ICRC, IHL, international humanitarian law, protection, rules of war

You may also be interested in:

The shifting battlefield: technology, tactics, and the risk of blurring lines in warfare

🕒 12 mins read

Accountability / Analysis / Generating Respect for IHL / History / Humanitarian Action / IHL Ruben Stewart

The accelerating integration of emerging technologies into armed conflict is transforming not only the tools ...

Complying with IHL in large-scale conflicts: detention operations in international armed conflicts

🕒 17 mins read

Accountability / Analysis / Generating Respect for IHL / History / Humanitarian Action / IHL

Sylvain Vité & Isabelle Gallino

Large-scale detention operations in international armed conflicts (IACs) pose significant humanitarian, legal, and operational challenges. ...