PREVENTING THE SPREAD OF COVID-19 IN SOMALIA

Coronavirus poses a health threat to communities impacted by war and violence, climatic shocks, and displacement in Somalia. The ICRC together with the Somali Red Crescent Society (SRCS) are taking immediate steps to fight COVID-19 in the country.

The ICRC is adapting existing programs to tackle the virus while continuing its work to support communities affected by armed conflict and violence. Together, the ICRC and SRCS have trained staff and SRCS volunteers with the aim of raising awareness about COVID-19 and steps that should be followed to prevent further spread of the virus.

IN COMMUNITIES

The ICRC and the SRCS reaches out to communities, including displaced people, to prevent the spread of COVID-19 within the areas served by the 29 SRCS Primary Health Care (PHC) clinics supported by the ICRC in south and central Somalia. In Somaliland and Puntland, the SRCS is implementing the same activities in another 35 PHC clinics supported by other members of the Red Cross and Red Crescent Movement.

To carry prevention messages to the general public, radio spots are being broadcasted by 10 radio stations across the country.

- 302 volunteers and 378 health staff trained on Covid-19 prevention messages across south and central Somalia. 388 health staff working in four hospitals supported by the ICRC were trained as well.
